

MD535: ETHICAL ISSUES IN CROSS-CULTURAL MINISTRY. (4 units)

Bruce Bradshaw, Adjunct Instructor in Mission Development.

DESCRIPTION:

The purpose of the course is to explore the ethical nature of Cross-Cultural Ministries. Its thesis is that all cross-cultural ministries have ethical implications; these ministries change, modify or shift the religious beliefs, worldview assumptions, myths and values of a culture. Christians who are engaging in cross cultural ministries, then, must define and implement an ethical framework for their work, empowering them to make ethical decisions as they influence cultural change. This course is relevant for anyone who engages in domestic or foreign cross-cultural ministries.

LEARNING OUTCOMES: Upon successful completion of this course, the student will be able to:

- Understand the difference between propositional and narrative ethics
- Engage the positions and the tension between Christianity and culture.
- Apply ethical reasoning to case studies that emerged from the professor's field experiences.
- Know the theological implications of ethical ministries, including the role of the church, the tension between evangelistic and social action ministries, and the cultural influences on religious expressions.

COURSE FORMAT:

The class will be conducted on the Internet using a 10-week lesson program aligned with Fuller's academic calendar. Each week, students and the instructor will interact with the material and each other through threaded discussions, live Internet "chats," and web-based research. The course will address a variety of case studies from development and evangelism ministries around the world.
